It makes sense to interview no more than six candidates because of the cost and time involved. After the short-listing process of reviewing CVs or application forms against the job description and person specifications, preparation for the interviews can be started.

The aim of the interview is to collect information about the suitability of the candidate for a particular post, not to find out if the candidate is likeable. Individual interviews can be useful, but panel interviews can help protect against individual bias, though they are more expensive. Too many people on the panel can be intimidating: three seems to be a good number, with one chairperson. The interviewers should review the job description, person specification and applications, and be familiar with the requirements of the job. They should make notes of the key areas and discuss these with their colleagues. It should be clear before the interviews start who will ask which questions, because a free-for-all can be confusing for the candidate. The interview should have a clear structure and this should be explained to the candidate at the very start. The chairperson should link between the phases of the interview and between the panelists. This is especially true for telephone interviews. There are five phases to the interview. An introduction to the interviewers helps to settle the candidate. Then the structure of the interview should be explained.

The main phase is the questioning of the candidate to obtain the information necessary to make a good decision. Questions should focus on the past, not the future and the panel should avoid hypothetical questions. General questions should lead to more focused questions which are looking for evidence of what the candidate did in certain situations. You will use the CV or application form as the basis for this stage. You are looking for concrete answers which highlight learning experiences and achievements. You should also explore the candidate's background, expertise, knowledge and skills as well as what they think of as their strengths and weaknesses. You are also checking to see if there are any inconsistencies between what the application and the candidate says.

After this, the longest phase, the candidate should be invited to ask any questions they have about the job, the company, or anything else they might want clarified. Remember that the interview is not just about whether you feel the candidate is right for the job: it is also the time for the candidate to decide if the job and the company are suitable for them, and the opportunity for the candidate to question you is essential for them to be able to make this decision. At the conclusion of the interview the chairperson should make it clear when the candidate will hear the results of the interview.

An interview should be relaxed and friendly, but the interviewers should remain in control and be able to draw out nervous or shy candidates and to manage over-confident ones. Making a recruitment error can be very expensive and difficult to correct and interviewing should be seen as a moment of truth in the selection process.
